PREFACE

This document, the Finding Aid for the Gettysburg National Military Park William H. Tipton (1850-1929) Photographic Prints, 1863-1931 primarily describes prints made from negatives taken by William Howard Tipton at Gettysburg in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

This document represents many hours of work recording details about the items herein described. The reader should expect a reasonable degree of human error and consequently rely on personal observation of the actual items.

COPYRIGHT AND PRIVACY RESTRICTIONS

The copyright law of the United States (Title 17, United States Code) governs the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted materials. The Privacy Act of 1974 (5 United States Code 552a) governs the use of materials that document private individuals, groups and corporations.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a reproduction if the document does not infringe the privacy rights of an individual, group or corporation. These specified conditions of authorized use include:

- non-commercial and non-profit study, scholarship, research or teaching
- criticism or commentary
- as a NPS preservation or security copy for research use
- as a research copy for deposit in another institution

If the researcher later uses a copy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," the researcher is personally liable for copyright, privacy, or publicity infringement and agrees to indemnify the NPS from any legal action as a result of the error. Permission to obtain a photographic, xerographic, digital or other copy of a document does not indicate permission to publish, exhibit, perform, reproduce, sell, distribute or prepare derivative works from the document without permission from the copyright holder and from any private individual, group or corporation shown or otherwise recorded.

Permission to publish, exhibit, perform, reproduce, prepare derivative works from, sell or otherwise distribute the item must be obtained separately in writing from the holder of the original copyright (or if the creator is dead from his/her heirs) as well as from any individual(s), groups or corporations whose name, image, recorded words or private information (e.g. employment information) may be reproduced in the source material. The holder of the original copyright is not necessarily the National Park Service. The National Park Service is not legally liable for copyright, privacy or publicity infringement when materials are wrongfully used after being provided to researchers for "fair use."

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copying order if fulfillment of the order is judged in violation of copyright or federal or state privacy or publicity law. This institution also places restrictions on the use of cameras, photocopiers and scanners in the research room.

INTRODUCTION

This document, the Finding Aid for the Gettysburg National Military Park William H. Tipton (1850-1929) Photographic Prints, 1863-1931 is the result of work by the Museum Services staff, Gettysburg National Military Park. These prints (GETT 41136) were created from the thousands of glass plate and cellulose nitrate negatives produced by William Howard Tipton (1850-1929), a prominent Gettysburg photographer who, as young boy, assisted local photographers in documenting the aftermath of the battle.

The “core” of this photographic series was originally a much larger group of photographs, most of which are no longer held by the park (having been transferred to the National Archives in 1965). Additionally other photographers Tipton worked with during his career might have made many of the photographs that can be traced back to Tipton’s studio. Some are thought to be copies Tipton made from original plates by Timothy O’Sullivan or Matthew Brady, at least partially suggesting that this series might more accurately be called the “Tipton Era Collection.”

The prints had most recently been stored in the archives building at the park. Previous to that they had been stored in the maintenance building and in the historian’s office at the park. The prints have been cataloged into the Collections Management Module of the Automated National Catalog System Plus (ANCS+) at the collection (or series) level for submission to the National Catalog.

The finding aid is divided into four sections:

- Part 1: Collection Description:
 - a scope and content note (or brief synopsis of the collection)
 - description of the series into which the collection is organized
- Part 2: Historical Note
 - history of the William H. Photographic Prints
- Part 3: Collection Listing:
 - a box listing of the collection
- Bibliography

PART 2:

HISTORICAL NOTE

Biography of William Howard Tipton

William Howard Tipton was born Aug. 5, 1850 about four miles east of Gettysburg. At the time of the battle he was twelve years old and was an apprentice with Charles and Isaac Tyson, photographers in Gettysburg since 1859. Like many local residents the Tysons left town when it seemed clear the armies were likely to clash at Gettysburg.¹ Tipton, who remained in town, reportedly spent most of the three days with his mother and siblings hiding in the cellar of their home listening to sounds of artillery and occasional skirmishes in the back yard.² When the Tyson brothers returned, Tipton assisted them in photographing battlefield scenes. His apprenticeship was completed after three years, and he began his own career, at times working in partnership with Charles Tyson or another former Tyson employee, Robert A. Myers. In 1880 he became sole proprietor of his own studio. As his business grew, he became involved in local politics, serving on the chamber of commerce and town council, and served four terms as Chief Burgess of Gettysburg. He was elected to the state legislature for the 1897-98 term and represented Adams County as a Bull Moose party delegate for Theodore Roosevelt in 1912.³

Tipton declined a fifth term as Chief Burgess to devote full time to his thriving photography studio. He published a catalog advertising and listing for sale hundreds of stereoviews and photographs of scenes, monuments and group portraits on the Gettysburg battlefield as well as views from battlefields across the mid-Atlantic region, portraits of famous people and views of natural wonders. Tipton's studios were elaborate and state of the art with skylights, speaking tubes linking the rooms, and a printing light touted as one of the largest in the country. He expanded an existing facility on Chambersburg Street in 1894 and then moved to a new studio at 20-22 York Street in 1902. He had once lost thousands of negatives (dating 1860-78) in a fire in a temporary storage building, so the pride of his 1902 studio was a separate, fire-proof, brick vault where his huge collection of negatives was stored. They were organized according to a numeric system so that any image could be quickly located to fill orders. He billed his studio as the headquarters for all battlefield souvenir albums, guide books and novelties, and claimed an international mail order business.⁴ His success allowed him to expand his entrepreneurial interests. In the 1890s he bought land at Devil's Den and Little Round Top, the end-point of a commercial trolley line across the battlefield, and opened a restaurant, dance hall and photography stand. The Gettysburg National Park Commission contested the operation of the trolley and Tipton's concessions and eventually confiscated Tipton's property. The cases became landmark decisions supporting the federal government's right to take possession of threatened historic property.⁵

William H. Tipton Photographic Prints Provenance

When Tipton died in 1929 his photography business was sold and the proceeds divided among his three daughters and son, C. Tyson Tipton. C. Tyson Tipton had possession of at least part of his father's negatives and was offering them for sale as early as 1933.⁶ In 1935 C. Tyson Tipton offered his collection to the GNMP but refused to divide the collection to sell only those views of interest to the park, and a park official declined the chance to acquire them claiming lack of funds.⁷ By 1940 Tipton changed his mind and allowed Frederick Tilberg, Assistant Research Technician, later Chief Historian, to make a selective survey of the collection. The Eastman Kodak Company and several private individuals had approached Tipton about buying his father's photographs, but he gave preference to the park. GNMP Superintendent McConaghie wrote as justification for the purchase that "we have real and immediate need of this collection of negatives in every restoration job now in progress and planned for . . . accomplishment in the park," and Tilberg noted that a print made from the negatives for research purposes in the past cost more than C. Tyson Tipton was asking for each negative. Tilberg selected 1,064 plates and they agreed on a purchase price of $330. Tipton then offered to include the remainder of the collection, "with the exception of a few of personal or family interest," for the same price. Tilberg accepted the additional plates but later complained that many of them pertained "to recent times" and "do not have historical value." A total of 1,760 glass plate and cellulose nitrate negatives were transferred to a vault in the park offices February 20, 1940. The purchase was funded through CCC appropriations. In a 1943 reply to an inquiry about the collection, Tilberg reported that the park had only about 100 prints from the negatives "for use in restoration studies and general research."⁸ Even though many of the glass plates from which these prints were made carried Tipton's original cataloging number, Tilberg wrote after the purchase that the collection was in disarray when the park received it. He commented, "The plates in the containers were considerably mixed and the old catalog was no longer of any real use in locating plates.

⁸Frederick Tilberg, Assistant Research Technician, memorandum for the Superintendent, GNMP, Feb. 2, 1940; James R. McConaghie, Superintendent, memorandum for the Regional Director, Feb. 2, 1940; Frederick Tilberg, Asst. Historical Technician, letter to Dr. Vernon D. Tate, July 14, 1943; F. Tilberg, copy of note "Tipton photographic plates moved to the GNMP office on February 20, 1940: dated March 1, 1940; GNMP Archives, Vertical File 940.

Many plates had been loaned out without record and never returned.”⁹ Eventually park personnel assigned a new four-digit numbering system to the negatives and corresponding prints that encompassed #1676-5021. There are gaps within this range; perhaps built in to allow the collection to grow, perhaps indicating missing photographs.

By the early 1960s concern about the condition of the glass plates led park historians to transfer them to the National Archives where they could be more properly cared for. Transfer records indicate that 1600 plates were moved to Washington.¹⁰ The cellulose nitrate negatives that comprised the balance of the original 1,760 remained at the park.

The negatives and prints retained by the GNMP continued to be treated as park property used for research supporting park operations as well as occasionally provided to outside researchers. In the course of conducting research, incidental additions to the collection had been made over the years.

Other significant segments of the series were copies acquired from other sources to facilitate research. The largest such acquisition was from the Adams County Historical Society, which owns a collection of about 675 glass plate negatives from W.H. Tipton’s studio. In the late 1980s park personnel made copies (prints and negatives) of the ACHS collection, added them to the park’s “Tipton Collection,” and in exchange, provided ACHS with a set of copy prints of its glass plates.¹¹ Park staff assigned numbers 4225 through 4899 to these images.

Smaller additions to the GNMP collection include nine copy prints from the War Library and Museum in Philadelphia (numbers 6094 – 6105) and seventy-eight copy prints from Tim Smith, a Licensed Battlefield Guide and private Gettysburg collector (numbers 6005 – 6039 and 6059 – 6093).
